See you in DC, you Glorious Bastards.

Also, fuck Chyna.

Don't rely on the airlines. They are likely to shutdown the week of January 6th.

Come early if you're flying in.

How about canned food - like corned beef in the heavy-duty cans you open with the little key thing? Coupled with some cheese.

In a small cloth bag to keep from stinking everything up.

There is a 12a to 5a curfew in VA, state police are writting tickets between those hours for violating the curfew, even for out of staters. I have been helping a buddy fix up his house in VA and was heading home at 1a, got a ticket, with "fine to be determined" written on it. DO NOT LET THAT DETER YOU, I just want to let ya'll know what BS is going down in VA. MD has some ass-nine covid regs too, got a $500 fine there as well for not having my "covid papers"

Finally somebody(s) who understand that 100 people working in unison are worth more than 1000 well-intentioned people acting separately.

Where are the ham radio operators willing to provide comms? While I'm all in favor of a million pedes descending on Washington, we should have another million providing support.

Get on repeaterbook.com and program in the repeaters along the way. Let me know if you need any help. Also, although it isn't legal to transmit on the FRS/GMRS frequencies I highly recommend programming them in, as well as the MURS frequencies.

These will probably be dumb questions, but I'll ask anyway, because I'm unable to attend (which I'm really angry about, because — and this may sound crazy — but I've been expecting/anticipating an event like this since I was a teenager, ~2005, and always felt it'd happen and be my duty to be part of it... anyway) but still feel obligated to help/contribute in any way (as I noted, I've always felt this sense of duty around an event/time like this occurring in my lifetime).

So, to the question: For someone who is tech savvy, but never used a ham radio... is it something I could pick up fairly quickly, and is there anything useful I can do from my home/not being in DC, with one? I have access to one (my grandfather, always been big into it. In fact, he was an electrical engineer during the Korean War, and largely handled things related to comms, etc), and again, am willing to do anything that could be helpful for this event, but I've never used one in any capacity (playing with the police scanner as a kid is about. as close as it gets lol; but again, I'm very tech savvy in a number of other areas and pick things like this up quickly)

Anyone willing to answer these questions, or let me know if/how I might be able to help/serve and fulfill my duty, please let me know! If this fell on literally any day other than Wednesday at the beginning of a new year, I'd absolutely be there, but I unfortunately just can't make the logistics work (which really sucks, because my dad recently retired and would go, but he told me he'll only go if I'm going/if we go together)

As long you aren't stationary transmit all you want, it's impossible to find you. You can only be found if stationary at an identifiable place like a home address and snitches triangulate your transmission location.

I just posted the MURS and FRS/GMRS frequencies in another part of this thread. I think the MURS channels would be best for point-to-point comms, with the FRS channels for backup since most people who don't have ham-band-capable radios (like the Baofeng family) will probably have blister pack walkie-talkies that use those channels. Your Baofeng on FRS "should" be set to 1W output so as not to overpower the weaker radios.

Also anyone with the 22 channel fixed-antenna walkie talkies please note that the "privacy" settings PREVENT YOU FROM HEARING OTHERS who do not have the privacy setting turned on, not the other way around!

I was watching a Live-Feed from a patriot event and at some point someone in the chat box identified an Antifa-type who was skulking around the various MAGA people. I recall he said he was sending proof (maybe a private message) and they really did go confront the 'Spy' or agitator or whatever he was up to.

That was amazing to my mind. Someone maybe halfway across the country made a real difference via the internet online feeds. Who knows but the 'undercover antifa' may well have been a very real danger.

I'm onboard with that, a million Pedes who can rumble in-person but anyone who can do anything with support, information, intelligence, if they can coordinate, if someone on the ground wants to know "Where can we get XYZ" let someone be able to tweet or text that, etc etc all sorts of things can be done.

Provide comms in DC? Do you guys think our nations Capitol is a joke? They will find the frequency and jam it if you are using it for nefarious purposes. They can and have cut cell phone communications when the BLM/ANITFA riots were getting out of hand. All I'm saying is this is not some walk in the park.

parent permalink save report block reply.

– Cutter 3 points 4 hours ago +3 / -0

I doubt anyone thinks it will be a walk in the park, which is exactly why we are talking about things like communication. I could argue that since the DC police has fully automatic weapons and MRAPs, there's no sense in even going, but instead I encourage you to learn from history. For example, a time when a determined rag-tag group of part-time soldiers defeated the British army.

I used to own a Cherokee "Heavy" -- PA32-260, with empty weight 1680, useful load 1720 !!!! Six adults, 2 doors, 2 baggage compartments, 2 scoops. 150 MPH for almost 1000 miles -- way back in 1966. Single VOR/ILS, single 90 channel COMM, nothing else. No Xpndr required and GPS hadn't been invented yet.

Once flew from KSMO to Nova Scotia -- 3 1/2 weeks, 60 airports.

Wishing all pedes, both land bound and airborne, best of luck!!

Not to mention there is still going to be flight traffic not related to the rally before, during and after and shutting down flights will make all the normies mad as well. Anyone who thinks they'd shut down flights for a whole week just to spite Trump supporters is being paranoid and probably a doomer, if they could it would have already happened during previous rallies. They couldn't even stop domestic flights during the worst of the COVID shutdowns in states.

I highly doubt that they'd shut down airlines the entire week, if even the day of, it'd cause way to much disruption and those airlines are barely hanging on as it is. Anyhow if you're worried about the DC airport itself there are plenty other airports within a short driving distance of DC as well, also DC's inane COVID restrictions don't apply to travel from Virginia and Maryland so there's another reason not to fly into DC directly.

parent permalink save report block reply.

– ZerroDefex 2 points 6 hours ago +3 / -1

Oh true but there is too much non-rally traffic that'd disrupt as well and they're not going to shut down all flights in the tri-state area for a week and piss off all the normies as well. States that are still technically in COVID lockdown are still getting increased numbers of flights going in and out. This is selectively paranoid like the people talking about "don't use your phone in DC" while the agencies have plenty of other ways to know if you were there or not.

Facial recognition is mitigated by masks. Licence plates / EZ- Pass identification doesn't link you together with social credit score type tracking. Cell phone on free wifi network lets them connect you directly to online presence / persona and any profile they have.

That's sensible, not paranoia. Avoiding the development of such a profile via burner phone may be cheap security for many.

Reminds me of stories from when I was younger about the USSR, when I first began to understand why commies were dumb. A government and it's bureaucracy can only be so efficient before it begins to implode and collapse under its own weight.

Here we have an example of a “system” that is meant to “optimize” but any sane person can look at the evidence and tell you, this is insane. The system is flawed.

The path of least resistance for a package to move 10 miles is NOT “Lexington -> Hebron -> Indianapolis -> Chicago -> Houston -> Louisiana -> Atlanta -> Hebron -> Lexington”.

Why? What if the package was a fresh pizza ordered for dinner? Someone fucked up and now that system needs to be untucked. Now you're starting to get it.

But it doesnt have anything to do with carbon foot prints

For me it's a little of both. I don't care about calculating my carbon output overall, that seems asinine. I do however keep in mind that everything I throw away doesn't just disappear. I try to maintain my lifestyle in a way that if my waste disposal service all of a sudden stopped I wouldn't be sitting in a pile of trash.

Beyond that, the economics and just plain convenience of not having to buy new shit all the time has encouraged me to buy stuff that lasts.

The 90s movement against consumerism resulted from that particular 80s awareness that corporations were taking over our minds and the world.

The green/carbon footprint bullshit is actually a misdirection to counter awareness of excessive buying. It is "new consumerism" in disguise.

To save the world you need to buy all new stuff. A new Tesla. New solar cells. That new product that's supposed to be carbon neutral but actually just bought off some third world country's carbon credits.

The message is to buy green, but it's still buying.

It's not hunters fault, if you saw your father constantly molest your sister you would probably retreat into substance abuse as well. Not many are strong enough to fight back against something they are supposed to respect.

That's what my grandma did. She'd save the "funny papers" every Sunday (they were in color) and wrap all her gifts to us kids. If she got a gift with fancy wrapping paper she'd save it too along with any ribbon. She threw away very little. She kept a little bucket of corn cobs and an old Sears catalog in the bathroom as a joke. (I think)
